I feel quite certain that the Senator will never go on record as declaring that an agreement made by this country with another country, or with other countries, whereby upon the happening of a contingency agreed upon by all, the nations shall act together to effectuate the purposes of the agreement would be violative of any provision of the Constitution.

When we entered into a treaty-with Great Britain and Japan and Russia and off the Pribilo Islands, that treaty meant, to all intents and purposes, that our warships would act jointly against any people or any nation that would attempt to destroy those seals. Did we thereby surrender our power to declare war or to maintain an army and navy? And is it possible that we can enter into such an alliance to protect the lives of a few thousand seals without violating our Constitution, but that we make a like agreement with the nations of the world to prevent the

speech, said

The very first question that challenges our attention in the matter of whether a war in Europe is a matter of concern to the United States. The ultra opponents of any league of nations assert that European quarrels and European battles are no concern

Say the advocates of American isola tion: This is no concern of ours. We are big enough to take care of ourselves, and therefore, we do not want to be brought into European squab-

Says the Senator from California, speaking of these European countries: 'We do not need them as partners. They require us. They yield to us othing. They can yield to us nothing. We give to them everything. We can protect our borders for centuries to just as we have done in centuries before. The Lord has given us ographical isolation, and the Lord nas denied just that thing to the different races of Europe. And while our internationalists in behalf of the League of Nations prate of the fact that we cannot remain longer isolated they forget that the geography of the situation remains immutable. What do we get out of it, asks the Senator from California? Do we ask ourselves that question in the thouands of acts of generosity by which we gladden the lives of others? If the Senator does not ask himself that question, and I know he does not, then why does he insist that his Nawhich he loves better than himself, should ask it? If the question means, what are we to get out of it from a financial or a territorial standit, I freely admit that we do not need the assistance of any power on earth to protect our rights. I admit that we are so much more powerful than any other single nation today, so secure in our vast territorial exanse, in our geographical position and in our material resources, that we are practically immune from as-But are we thereby relieved from any duty toward the rest of the world, or does that immunity impose upon us a greater duty toward those who are not so protected as we are: What is the true American answer? There can be but one. The God of international justice, by his special favors, has given to us in territorial exent, in that splendid isolation, in our ast resources, in our mighty population, has by His very law of compensation imposed upon us a greater duty han upon the less fortunate people of the world, to shield the weak and to Unjustly Attacked mpel international right.

The Duty of a Nation

Mr. President, there is no moral duty incumbent upon any man in his relation to his fellow man that is not equally incumbent upon a nation in its relation to every other nation. Does any man deny that proposition? Vhat would you say of the strong. ous man, who would stand by while another strong man was beating a weak child to death, and idly remark: "It is no concern of mine: it is not my child." What would you say of a strong, vigorous swimmer who would stand on the shore and see a woman struggling in the waves be her death, reachg out her arms and crying for help, while he, folding his muscular arms, announces: "Oh, that is no concern of mine, she is not my wife or daugh-Mr. President, that doctrine of no concern of ours" is a shameful and monstrous doctrine.

h," but say the opponents to the League of Nations, "we can make up our minds what to do when the occaton arises." Well, Mr. President, what I want us to do is to be right there on the spot when the occasion arises. Had the United States been right on the spot with an agreement signed by us and signed by Germany, that Germany would not make war on France or any other country without ubmitting to a League of Nations the question of the righteousness of her cause, the world would have been spared this awful conflagration, with its consequent miseries which can never be forgotten. You know, and I know, that so long as the present conception of international right coninues, the conception that sovereignty has no bounds of limitations, we will not interfere unless some right of ours is attacked. What we want today is an international law on this subject, a law that will declare that war by one nation is a matter of concern to every other nation, and that no unjust war shall be waged by any nation. Now, that is just exactly what this League of Nations does.

War's Great Cost

But you say we can continue a peaceful policy with the world without binding ourselves to act in any particular way. Yes, that is exactly what we were saying for years prior to 1914, and especially prior to 1917. But we found that the world was not so large that we could escape being drawn into the vortex of a European conflagration. And while we scarcely got into the real conflict before its ose, while not more than 250,000 American soldfers were on the actual battle line at any one time, it is safe o say that this war has cost the United States not less than $40,000,-000,000. I admit that the sentiment is not as strong in this country, because few, comparatively, of our vast population ever saw even one battlefield. Slight, in comparison with our population, were our losses. Other countries bathed in blood, starved and emaciated, their cities full of cripples-armless, leggless, sightless men, are cailing to us whose wounds were slight to help them to rescue themselves from national hatreds and jealousies, which too many regard as elements of patriot ism. Shall we, in the arrogance of our power and self-sufficiency, turn a deaf ear to their entreaties? This covenant represents the deliberations of nations, some very important, some to us as a compromise compact, which al! of these great nations believe will accomplish the purpose of preventing any stupendous world war in the future. > Control of Waterways To the Editor of The Christian Science Monitor:

I note your editorial on "Railroad Control and Waterways." We want river improvement, we want the appropriations so made and so energetically expended, that the work sedestroyed before the next one has been secured. We want a more aggressive personnel of the Interstate Commerce Commission, men with more vision, and not quite so hidebound. WASHINGTON, District of Columbia Following the mild protest to the press in a statement made by Gen. Candido Aguilar of Mexico, regarding the entry of American troops into Mexico, the same Mexican, who, besides being Governor of Veracruz is connected with the Mexican Foreign Office, issued a statement yesterday in which the border incident of Sunday is described as closed.

According to the statements made by the diplomatists on both sides, there was presumably no understand-ing between the two governments, although, on the other hand, there are some circumstances which would seem to indicate that the incident was not without diplomatic antecedents. coming of General Aguilar to Washington on a special mission may be an indication, it is believed, of a change of attitude on the part of President Carranza toward the United

Whatever agreement, tacitly or formally, may exist between the United States and the Carranza Government as to the right of the United States freely to cross the border to stop firing by rebels into American territory, the State Department is not abating its representations to the Carranza Government that lawlessness must be stamped out. General Aguilar assures the State Department that this is being done and will be proseuted energetically.

Special to The Christian Science Monitor from its Eastern News Office

NEW YORK, New York-At the special session of the New York Legislature, both houses by unanimous vote made it possible for millions of dollars to be diverted to building purposes whereby homes would be provided for tenants in congested quarters of cities, especially in New York. By the end of the week. Governor Smith will sign four measures passed by the Legislature that deal with provisions for better housing conditions, the most important of them being the amendment to the Tenement House Law which grants permission to convert fourstory private dwellings into fourfamily apartment houses. According to Senator Charles E. Lockwood, chairman of the legislative committee on rentals and housing, this measure will make possible the conversion of 20,000 to 25,000 of these houses within two months, thereby accommodating 400,000 persons.

Another measure will stimulate building by permitting savings banks to lend 60 per cent of the value of the land during construction. Under the present law, savings institutions are permitted to advance only 40 per cent before construction is started and the other 20 per cent only after the construction of the building covered by the loan has been completed.

Senator Lockwood has received word that the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company will release immediately $5,000,000 for building purposes, thus making a total of $35,000,-CHICAGO, Illinois — The Postal relief measures.

Governor Smith said that he would issue a proclamation soon calling on insurance companies, banks, loan associations and other financial institutions to lend without stint to home builders.

After pointing out that the present Italian Government has become the slave of the popular passions which it has itself evoked, this well-informed writer proceeds to deal with President Wilson's public appeal to the opinion of the world, seemingly over the heads of the conference. For this, he says. there is a twofold explanation and knowledge and approval of the French and British premiers. On the other hand, further delay was rendered impossible by the discovery that the Italian Government was planning an proclaiming the formal annexation of Fiume to Italy. In such circumstances it is obvious that President Wilson acted in the very nick of time, and that Mr. Orlando's publicly affected surprise was, to say the least, highly disingenuous.

Being an institution and not a calendar—

The John Wanamaker New York August Sale of Furniture

will begin this year on Friday, June 20

And this is a frank statement of "Why"

The August Sale of Furniture is an origination of the John Wanamaker Store. It had its origin in trade conditions which existed in 1890, the year it was inaugurated.

At that time it was the general custom in the manufacturing market for furniture factories practically to close down certain months of the year because of lack of orders. In the retail market August was a month in which very little furniture was purchasedpeople were away on their holidays or in their summer homes and there was no general desire to buy such "a heavy and important thing as furniture."

We said to ourselves

-"here is an economic condition that ought to be remedied. The store's over-head charges are going on just the same whether we sell furniture or not; both the furniture mills and furniture workers are losing money by closing down. Can we do anything to remedy this wrong condition and distribute the furniture business more equally over the months of the year, keeping ourselves, furniture workers and furniture factories, at work, even in a so-called dull-season?'

We talked things over with our furniture makers, told them we would be willing to give them certain specific orders to make furniture in their slack season, keeping their workers busy and their factories going, if they would make the furniture at reduced prices-practically at the cost of wood and labor.

Makers of furniture saw the point, agreed to our plan, and the first August Sale was held. It was a success, and the August Sale of Furniture became an institution not only in the Wanamaker Store, but in stores all over the United States and in other countries.

As time went on and the general market offered opportunities, we purchased special lots of furniture, discontinued styles, samples and surplus lots which factories had on hand and added these to the specially-planned stocks of furniture which factories made up for us. The general extension of the August Sale of Furniture to other stores brought about a competitive condition among furniture manufacturers. They not only sold to stores their surplus stocks, discontinued styles, samples, and goods made at cost in dull seasons, but they began making "sale furniture," imitating and cheapening their regularly made furniture, and these stores, not particularly careful of their reputation or method of dealing, began holding sales with this cheapened furniture without giving any additional value for the money the people were asked to pay.

Now, of course, this cheapened furniture never found its way into Wanamaker's or any other good stores, because having founded the sale, as this whole business is founded, in the interest of the buying public, in cooperation with reputable furniture manufacturers to help them over. the hard season, we would not throw away our business reputation, to say nothing of the moral wrong of it, by doing anything that was playing fast and loose with the people.

On the contrary

we added in recent years to the general service of the August Sale by adding to our special purchases our entire regular stock of furniture, offering everything on our floors at prices at least 10 per cent. below our regu-

That the people appreciated the service of our August Sales is shown by the fact that they grew larger each year our last sale in the war year 1918 being the largest in point of sales in both our stores in all our history.

Now conditions are changed and we change with them

Whether due to the war or to the evolution of economic conditions it is a fact that today the question of keeping furniture factories going is not one of orders, but of material and labor, and in stores the question is not so much of selling furniture as of getting it. In plain words, we are face to face with a furniture shortage with its necessary complement of prices the highest in furniture

Frankly, we do not expect to get much more than half of the furniture purchases we have made during the past six months. We are being asked every day to pay still higher prices for such orders as we choose to give to manufacturers of furniture. If we could sell out our entire stock tomorrow we could not duplicate it at anything like its price, if we could duplicate it at all within three months.

Face to face with these conditions

we have seriously considered whether we should hold an August Sale of Furniture at all.

On the other hand no man can say what the next six months will bring forth. Conditions may turn around the other way. Supplies of wood may be increased. Factories may speed up their operations. And prices may tend to lower.

What is our best service to the people in this emergency?

Certain it is that homes have been let run down during war time. Certain it is that the population of New York and vicinity has been growing these war years, when building of nomes almost stopped. There never was such a dearth of homes and apartments as exists today in this part of the country. Because of this dearth rents have been going up and families are fairly clamoring for homes to live in. Returning soldiers are getting back into business life, getting married and seeking to open new homes. All this means there is a demand -a demand NOW-for furniture and for home equipment, more insistent than ever before.

We have determined to meet conditions as they arise—to offer our best service in furniture and home equipment-at this moment as we are trying to offer it every day in all kinds of merchandise we sell.

Therefore, be it known-the John Wanamaker August Sale of Furniture will begin this year Friday, June 20, and continue so long as we can continue it in fairness to ourselves and to the people.

Because of the volume of these sales, providing a larger outlet for our own and manufacturers' stocks with a more even distribution of business over the entire year, our operating expenses for the entire year are lower, bringing lower prices at all times. But prices are still lower in this sale because thousands of customers concentrate their buying in this event to obtain the advantage of the special opportunities available only at

> Speaking of Keenc, London's streets, especially round about the slums, are still full of reminiscences of the great Punch artist. He and Phil May are always in the mind as one wanders among the crowds so characteristic of the poorer quarters. One day I saw one of Keene's Scotchmen, a stranger in London, with tamo'-shanter shawl and everything. If I had run across one of the characters from "Alice in Wonderland" I couldn't have been more surprised and pleased. Up till just before the war, it was still a common sight to see Phil May's pathetic groups outside the same sordid "pubs."

I do not think I have ever seen a sadder sight than the groups of women, many with wee babies in their arms," waiting outside the gin shops for their men or boys to bring liquor out to them. CHARGE AGAINST MILITARY BUREAU

WASHINGTON, District of Columbia -Criticism of the Military Intelligence Bureau of the Army as practicing "an assumption of authority which we cannot endure" was made in the House, yesterday by Royal C. Johnson, Republican Representative from South Dakota, who served with the American expeditionary forces. He complained that Hugh Jefferies of Danbury, Wisconsin, a former sergeant in the army and president of the American Military Reform Association, had been "summarily arrested, searched, and his private papers confiscated," recently by intelligence officers, while he was at Camp Devens visiting men with whom he served overseas. Military intelligence officials declared yesterday they had no record that Sergeant Jefferies had been arrested by intelligence operatives.

PRESS OPINION ON KNOX RESOLUTION

of Covenant From Treaty war forever.

Following are some of the views exessed by American editors with regard to the proposition of Philander C. Knox, United States Senator from Pennsylvania, that the League of Nations Covenant be not included in the

Philadelphia Ledger

The Knox resolution is predicated upon the wholly untenable and false umptions that the League of Naions will be "inimical to our free nstitutions": that the American fairs. ent on it; that the ratification involve a change in the Constitution of the United States; that a safe peace can be attained and its terms guaranteed without any league to enforce them, and finally, that the formation of a League of Nations can safely be left until after peace shall have been declared.

But the supreme inconsistency revealed in the final clause of the Knox resolution, which, while purporting to speak for the Senate alone, es to give assurance to the Allies and to the world that the government of the United States will perate with "our cobelligerents for the defense of civilization" in the event that the peace and freedom of Europe are again threatened by any lower or combination of powers. In his clause Senator Knox would apsupport which the League of Nations is planned to carry into effect.

Chicago Evening Post

The Knox resolution contains glaring inconsistencies. For example, it asserts that the "treaty as drawn contains principles, guaranties and undertakings obliterative of legitimate race and national aspirations; oppressive of weak nations and peoples and destructive of human progress and

The plain logic of the underlying purpose of the Knox resolution would point to a separate peace with the central powers, yet mongrel-like the resolution would maintain one policy in making our government a signatory and underwriter to a general treaty of European peace, involving a drastic reorganization of the European state system, while giving moral support to the contrary policy of a complete withdrawal from the vexatious obligations of participation in old world af-

The United States Senator who votes for the adoption of the Knox Director of National Bureau of Standresolution aimed at the separation of the League of Nations and the general peace treaty casts a vote in condemnation of the league covenant. "The implication running through is that civilized man will become so immediately capable of temperance that no restraint is needed to keep tainment of this condition will at best require a long process of steady development. Throughout this process, the excesses, and resultant losses to national usefulness and well-being are bound to continue.

"If a man gets drunk and maltreats Russian subjects at Leavenworth, to his family, or becomes a menace or nuisance to those with whom he comes in contact, the result, far from being liberty, is a clear infringement of the liberties of other people, as it subjects them to definite inconveniences and restraints, if not sufferings. Even the man who becomes passively drunk, quite apart from harming himself, is cheating society out of his usefulness. It is all very well to say that free government is better than good government, and that prohibition is an infringement of private liberty. But when liberty has become to a large extent license, and that license is of a type to stunt and inhibit progress by destroying the effectiveness of a definite number of human beings in each generation, it is the clear duty of the State to step in and protect society from apart of itself, if necessary by compulsion. Beyond all doubt this clear duty may be performed satisfactorily by the State only by the enforcement of a strict prohibition of intoxicating beverages.'

WRIGHT-MARTIN'S LARGE CONTRACT

NEW YORK, New York-The aircraft department of the government has increased its inquiry for Hispano-Suiza Motors and the Wright-Martin Company is figuring on supplying a minimum of 1800 instead of the original 1200. The contract will involve close to $15,000,000.

Negotiations looking toward the merger of the Wright-Martin Aircraft Company and International Motor Truck Corporation are progressing favorably and an announcement giving details of the transaction will be made soon. It is figured that the common and preferred shareholders of Wright-Martin will fare much better through the merger than they would through liquidation. Both classes of stock will be given permanent earning power.

There were no walks, but it was all grass, and the beds lay round about in the grass, and there was a big old sundial in the middle of the garden. . . . It was a place quite different from any other; it seemed to us from the first as if we ought to talk in low voices there, almost as if it were a church.

The Brook

The Brook was, as usual, bustling along. He sped past the willows, and Violets and buttercups later on, but they cried out while they bent their graceful arms toward him, "O Brook, why will you not stay and talk to us?

Why do you hurry so?" But the Brook called back, as he rippled on: "I have no time to stay and talk; I am so busy." On and on he flowed, till at last he came to a smooth place, where he could make himself a pool and rest for a moment to take breath. In the middle of the pool was a large old mossy stone, which also asked the Brook why he came down so fast.

"Because," answered the Brook, "I have a great work to do. Far, far on from here lies the ocean and, if I did not hurry, it would soon be empty, "Oh, Bill is a beauty, all right.

His discomfiture increased, as he saw the river joined by countless small streams that continued to push him old lawns of grass with beech trees aside. The Bluets' Party

You know the dainty clumps of tiny, in all my life." I said, as earnestly as I could. "May we go down the walks?" four-petaled flowers that whiten the Bogy said that we might go wherever spring meadows and make one think we liked. He went with us and showed that an April snowstorm has left late us all the nicest plants, and told us drifts there? Perhaps you call them innocents, or their prettier name, mind us asking a few questions? It is bluets, which some one must have a thing, you know, that nurse will not given them because of their pale, bluewhite coloring. Did you ever wonder

I was walking through the fields a few days ago, trying to find some dogtoothed violets. Perhaps they had not moved into that locality yet; at any rate. I missed them, but in one whiteclouded meadow I made a most interesting discovery. The bluets were having a party! Not a wee, small celebration either, but a big, festive occasion, with groups of merry guests all

I felt sure that it was spring's return which they had gathered together to celebrate. Not a sign of a written invitation could I discover, so I guessed that Robin Redbreast must have delivered the messages in some morning carol; and, after all, who would not prefer to have his party invitation sung instead of written, if only for the unusualness of it? I could imagine how happy it must have sounded from the top of some red maple on the edge of the field, just inside the stone wall, Cheerily-cheerup, cheerup! Miss Spring invites you to come to her party, Down in the meadow just this side of the brook. There'll be blue sky and sunshine and refreshments. And every bluet is invited to the party this week.

bluets at once! Cheerily-cheer, cheerup!

Apparently the word reached every one, and bluets are fond of parties. All were there, enjoying themselves immensely. As Mr. Robin had promised, there was plenty of blue sky, flecked with soft clouds, like white ruffles on a girl's party frock; the maple buds were red; the sunshine lay warm on the especial meadow where I wandered; and everywhere were the happy bluets. I suppose that it was the first party ever for those particular plants (bluets are annuals, you know, and blossom only one season); but they behaved as beautifully as one could wish, curtesying politely to their neighbors here and there and bowing low when the south wind swept across the meadow floor. The music for the occasion was furnished by the Robin-Bluebird-Sparrow Trio, recently re-turned from the south, Miss Robin and Miss Bluebird rendered vocal solos, which the guests seemed to enjoy

As for games, it occurred to me that bluet parties are very like children's parties. Over at one end of the field I found a group of flowers, which must have been playing hide and seek, for there they were, scattered around a rough granite rock, bending this way and that as if to spy the particular were drop-the-handkerchief players in game which delighted me most of all the one in which I should have liked to join, had I been a guest instead of only a spectator-was an unmistakable Virginia reel! There were the two long, well-defined lines of bluets facing each other, and between them strayed several flower "couples" in quaint dance figures. Even Mr. Robin's tune at that moment was a perfectly good one by which to dance a Virginia reel. For an instant, I almost wished myself a four-petaled flower, about three inches tall!

And the refreshments! Well those were not ordinary party ones, I admit. . There was no sign of ice cream and frosted cake; the guests did not even seem to miss them. Instead, they sipped daintily at the rich moisture in the earth beneath them, and gathered color from the air and sunlight around them. I did not wait for the end of the party, so I cannot say how long it lasted. When I came away, the bluets were still smiling at one another or. with upturned faces, listening to the bird trio. I have an idea that bluet parties are not altogether uncommon events (though never commonplace ones); and, should you go down into a meadow some warm day soon, perhaps you might peep in upon one.

The Lotus Festival

It was a hot summer night, and all the shop windows were bright with lanterns, shaped like the lotus buds in the big moat. Just as the little lady concluded her question, there was a "plop" in the water at their feet, and the next thing they saw, right under them, was Mr. Bill Bullfrog, hopping up on to a mossy rock and gazing up at them, with the friendliest wideawake look on his wide face and rather grim forts until the water echoed with the mouth. His eyes were like amber jewels, full of curious kindliness-real human interest.

"Look at him," the little lady said. "Why. Bill, this is the very nicest sort of visit I ever had with a bullfrog," she added happily to the big fellow.

The frog opened his mouth in funny curly wide grin, and flicked his tongue around with a lightning movement, as much as to say: "Well, it's the nicest visit I ever had with anyone outside of a pond."

The Theater

The theater, like the rest of the world, is in the melting pot. The actors who, up to the time of Marlowe and Shakespeare, were first cousin to rogues and vagabonds have joined the respectable ranks of the trades union, having in the intervals even achieved titles, whilst the managers are accused of an effort to reduce the drama to the level of a trust. As for the authors, if they are successful they ride in motor cars, and find that all is well with the world; if, on the other hand, they are not, they walk, and denounce a generation incapable of appreciating them, as a "purblind race of miserable men."

The war is held responsible for much. As one hears daily of its many energies one is reminded of the activities attributed by a brilliant British jeu d'esprit to the

"Who makes the quartern loaf and Luddites rise?
Who fills the butchers' shops with large blue flies?
Who thought in flames St. James's Court to pinch?
Who burned the wardrobe of poor Lady Finch?"

Then it was the little man in the green coat and white waistcoat, today it is "the Old Stone Gods," detonating the bombs of unrest in the barrack room and on the lower deck, in the factory and even in the Green Room. As a matter of fact what is at fault is, and always has been, human nature, and human nature aroused by that love of money which, the wise man of the East declared, was the root of all evil. So long as the fortunes to be derived from the stage were only such as, in their most successful instances, satisfied great artists like Shakespeare, or Garrick, or Kean, the competition of commerce was not likely to be severe. But when it occurred to somebody that it would be possible to control not a theater but a group of theaters, and even to amalgamate these groups in an international trust, there came upon the scene an entrepreneur who knew not Joseph, in other words a manager to whom the old traditions of the stage were a scrap of paper. Wall Street and Austin Friars threatened the land once ruled by Henry Irving or Mr. Field.

Now it is not much good blaming Wall Street or Austin Friars. Their mind is the mind corporate. It thinks in dividends, and has no artistic weaknesses whatever. This does not mean that it would not lavish thousands on a spectacle, where a few hundreds would have produced such scenic triumphs as Irving's desolate Duninane, or Tree's exquisite garden of Olivia. But the thousands are not to satisfy an artistic craving, but to swell the box office returns. Not, once more, that Wall Street and Austin Friars do not want to be artistic, it is that they cannot understand the artistry of a green curtain with a perfectly trained company playing, say, "Troilus and Cressida," before it. Their mentality is rather that of Sir Gorgius Midas, who when he came in alone at midnight was outraged because only five of his six flunkeys were present to give him his supper, or like that of the cheerful and wealthy manufacturer, in one of Mr. German Reed's plays, who entering his drawing room, after the upholsterers had put the finishing touches to it, renarked with genial satisfaction, to his wife, "Them's my colors, Maria, red and gold.'

In such circumstances, it is not much to be wondered at that the old race of actor managers, the Bancrofts and Buckstones, the Irvings and Trees, the Wyndhams and Alexanders, is disappearing in London, or that a man like George Arliss has difficulty in forming a real stock company of able actors and actresses for the presentation of the legitimate drama in America. Yet Mr. Arliss' ideal is one worthy of all support and of all success. It is that which made possible the Globe and the Maison Molière, and which was, to all intent and purpose, the foundation of the great patent companies of the past, the King's, the Duke's, and the Italians, to say nothing of such famous companies as that whose masks and powder barrels traveled, with the baggage of Marshal Saxe, under the direction of Favart. But Wall Street and Austin Friars know nothing of these things, and like Gallio care for none of them. Like a famous character, in a famous play, they are there to give the public what it wants. They think they know what the public wants, and, today, perhaps they do. But the public, in its likes and dislikes, is ever a chameleon, and the play in question ends, as every one remembers, with an intimation, to the provider of public wants, to prepare for the rainy day, the day when the public wants something better than it is getting. To which, no doubt, Wall Street and Austin Friars would affably reply, that all that was proved by the suggestion was the necessity for making hay while the sun shone.

What does the public want?—that after all is the question. The public, in matters of taste, as in most other things, is a shiftless thing waiting all the time to be led. In its sincere moments, however, when it is not going to the opera, to Ibsen, or to the futurists because the little god of fashion has blazed the way, it knows exceedingly well what it likes, jokes, as Sir William Gilbert pointed out, of the sitting on a pork pie order, elecorations in the red and gold style of Mr. German Reed. Nor, really, is this so very dreadful or so very hopeless after all. Educate the crudeness a little, soften the garishness a trifle, and you have, what? Aristophanes and Rubens, the Sausage-Seller and Mars and Venus. It is all a matter of education, and the desire for education comes with the ability to obtain it. Just what has happened, at the present moment, is this, that a sudden economic dislocation has placed a certain spending power in the hands of people unaccustomed to exercising it, and they are spending, in consequence, not wisely but too well. But let Mr. Arliss take heart, and Wall Street and Austin Friars take notice, a diet of fatuity quickly produces a nausea, and the correspondence in the London press which has just taken place is only one of the straws which indicate the getting up of a healthy breeze.

There is nothing particularly new in the present conditions. The Greeks fell away from Sophocles and Aschylus; the Circus proved a greater attraction to the Romans than Terence, indeed they liked even Plautus better; it is safe to say that more people went to the bull ring than ever listened to Calderon or Lope de Vega. Did not Cibber improve upon Shakespeare, and add to him,—only to think of it! And so it has always been. Nevertheless every winter of intellectual discontent is followed by a summer warmed by some sun such as that of York. The winter into which the theater passed with the coming of the war is showing signs of breaking up, and one of these is the revolt in London, and another Mr. Arliss' courageous effort.

Millions in the Scrap Heap

SUPERANNUATED after their years of efficient and appreciated service under the flag of the United States of America, twelve battleships of the pre-dreadnaught type, mounting mixed batteries, have been, or are about to be, placed out of commission. The official announcement from Washington is that they will eventually be broken up for junk, or be used as targets for more modern vessels of the navv. . These twelve vessels, now regarded as obsolete, because of their inability to compete in naval warfare as it is waged at the present day, were built between the years 1893 and 1901, at a cost, for hulls and machinery, of $90,000,000. This cost, roughly estimated, represented approximately a dollar for each person in the United States at that time, and while the total outlay and the present apparent loss may at first seem large, it is both logical and just, if any defense of the policy of the Administration is deemed necessary, to point to the fact that every resident of the United States whose dollar was invested in these ships may congratulate himself, or herself, that after years of sturdy service these defenders of freedom are to be disposed of by their friends, as may be deemed fit, and that they never hauled down their colors under fire. Many a worse fate for a battleship might be imagined than that of being brought home and retired.

Hosts of people in the United States, as well as in other parts of the world, well remember the famous "forced march" of the historic Oregon, one of the 12 battleships placed on the retired list, when it steamed from the Pacific to the Atlantic, around the Horn, at the time of the Spanish-American War. In the estimation of many people of the United States, this single performance, perhaps vitally necessary in the undertaking in which the armed forces of the United States were then engaged, repaid to every American the dollar which, theoretically, he had invested in the 12 ships now declared obsolete. Free Cuba, to the Cubans, at Jeast, is worth more than the first cost of the discarded fleet.

But in counting the cost and estimating the return upon the investment which has been made by the ships, the greatest consideration, after all, is the important part they played for many years in upholding the traditions of freedom and liberty. Each of them, the Oregon, Indiana, Iowa, Massachusetts, Kentucky, Maine, Illinois, Alabama, Wisconsin, Missouri, Ohio, and the sturdy Kearsarge, has done her duty under all conditions that have been imposed.

Canada's Industrial Commission

THE opening meeting of the recently appointed Royal Commission on Industrial Relations which was held, a short time ago, at Victoria, British Columbia, revealed an attitude on the part of Labor which urgently calls for reconsideration. One of the most welcome features of the commission is the exceptional breadth of its terms of reference. No attempt has been made to restrict the commission in any direction in making its inquiries, and it is clear from the opening statement of the chairman, Mr. Justice Mathers, of Winnipeg, that the Canadian authorities are prepared to attach the utmost importance to the commission's findings, and to act on them to the utmost extent possible. Mr. Justice Mathers made this quite clear. The object of the commission, he declared, was to make recommendations which might mean drastic changes in the industrial and social systems of Canada and lead to the establishment of "permanent improvement in the relations between employers and employed."

In these circumstances, it is particularly regrettable that organized Labor in Victoria should have decided, as it did, that it would not be represented before the commission, and it is to be earnestly hoped that, as the commission moves eastward, as it intends to do, until the principal centers of population throughout the country have been visited, wiser counsels will prevail. Nothing is to be gained and very much is to be lost by this refusal on the part of organized Labor to join in such a clearly bona-fide effort to reach an understanding, and such a policy is, of course, opposed to the best Labor thought in the country.

in the country. The only result of such abstentions is that the views of Labor are expressed, as they were at Victoria the other day, by men who, however well qualified individually, lack that support which flows from the fact that they really represent the great party to industry for which they claim to speak. Thus, as might be expected, the most noticeable thing at Victoria, as far as the Labor view was concerned, was lack of unanimity. When it came to the question of the proposals of Labor itself for its own betterment the views expressed were in the highest degree conflicting. One prominent trade unjonist who attended the meeting of the commission first of all expressed the desire of the unions which he represented to "make a clean sweep of oriental Labor," and, later on, insisted that organized Labor, as a whole, did not object to oriental Labor, provided the orientals adopted the same standard as the whites. He considered that it was the duty of the state, in some way, to guarantee to the individual employment.

Now these are, of course, points that ought to be brought out and given prominence, and, to the extent that this was done, a good purpose was served, but one would certainly look, in these times, for some constructive proposal from organized Labor on the question, and not a mere recital of grievances. Organized Labor in Canada would do well to consider the opportunity, which it is now letting slide, of showing itself capable of constructive statesmanship. Its present attitude toward the Royal Commission on Industrial Relations, as revealed at Victoria, is as short-sighted as it is altogether unworthy.

Commencement and Its Ghallenge

Few people realize what mingled thoughts and sentiments are stirred by the annual recurrence of commencement week in American colleges and universities. Once the significance of the period was concerned very largely with the fact that a class of students were taking their degrees and going forth into the world to win a place for themselves. Nowadays there is much more in it than merely the graduation ceremonies. More and more the emphasis is shifting to the reunion of alumni classes. The graduation of a new class has become hardly more than incidental to a great homecoming of university sons and daughters, a great gathering of university families, with consequent renewal of university associations and revival of university influence and inspiration.

Outwardly, the festivities of these reunions are apt to give a wrong impression to the uninitiated. Fun and frolic may seem to be overemphasized. As a matter of fact, however, these phases are superficial. They are the froth marking the eddy, but they show nothing of the depth and power of the clear current beneath. Moreover, they are common in proportion to the youth of the graduates. For the younger classes, the temporary return to the campus is to become students again, with all the abandon of student days and ways. Older classes find their zest for this sort of thing gradually satiated, and in almost equal measure they discover increasing enjoyment in the wealth of class friendships, growing stronger and richer with each recurring commencement season, binding members together first as classmates, then as friends, and at length uniting members and their families into a sort of super-family wherein differences tend to be harmonized, idiosyncrasies to be accepted without criticism, the weaknesses of some to be equalized by the friendly strength of others, and all relationships to be on a basis of sympathy and friendly interest.

But all this has a value not for the participants alone. For, in the general gatherings of the commencement season, the dominant question everywhere is, "What are you doing?" That, essentially, is the query of one individual to another; in a larger way it is the query of the university to all returning alumni. There is friendly interest in the interrogation, but there is also, no one can deny, a friendly challenge. The implication of the question is just this, that the university training has fitted each student to work that the world shall express, in some small part at least, those ideals which a university upholds and inculcates, and that each returning alumnus is expected to give account of his stewardship with respect to these ideals. So it is that each individual tests his fellows by that recurring inquiry, and, whether he realizes it or not; acquits or convicts each by the answer received. So it is that the university itself, honoring alumni of special achievement with a special degree at the public commencement exercises, and calling on them at the great gathering of the alumni, afterward, for an address, says, in effect, "Tell us, your university family, have you, in this that you have achieved, upheld the ideals?" And on the reply, surely, is judgment rendered. So surely, indeed, that many a man, accustomed in his position outside to dominate, comes back to take an honorary degree from his university not so much in pride as in humility, conscious that he will be expected to account for his stewardship, and that he will be judged not altogether as the world

Thus it is that any university, worthy of the name, exercises a tremendous influence and is a source of constant inspiration. Not that its condemnation is feared, but rather that its just praise is eagerly sought. Few prizes in America are so highly regarded, or so earnestly, if perhaps secretly, wished for, as the true acclaim of the old college class, or the honor of a special degree from a university of standing and discrimination, with bestowal heartily indorsed by a great body of alumni. And thus it is that numbers of people without university association or academic degree may yet share the interest of commencement week. Clearly the university is a factor of benefit for them as well as for the degree holders. As it holds high the torch of learning it perpetuates in the world the refinements of scholarship, but as the flame of that torch kindles and rekindles idealism, it keeps alive for everybody the hope of better things.

Shantung

A WELL KNOWN statesman once declared, in a moment of despair at what he regarded as the average man's average ignorance of geography, that most people, if they were asked, would say that Mongolia was the name of a tree and Albania a special type of rabbit with white fur and pink eyes. If he had been writing today, perhaps he would have added that Shantung would, until recently, have been confidently identified as a kind of silk. Another well-known statesman, however, was wont to declare that the only value of war that he could see was that it taught people geography. And this has surely been the case in the Great War. Shantung may have been silk in 1914, but it is certainly not silk today. More and more, as the weeks go by, the world is learning the story of this territory, a great deal larger in area than England, with a population almost as great, which Japan has succeeded, temporarily at any rate, in securing for her sphere of influence.

Only those who know China, of course, can know what this means to the Chinese, for Shantung is China's holy land. From Shantung came Confucius and Mencius, whilst through the middle of the province runs a famous mountain range, the highest peak in which, the T'ai-shan, is today a place of much pilgrinage, and has been famous in Chinese history for over 4000 years. That is the way, of course, that China deals with things, in thousands of years where other peoples have to do the best they can in hundreds. Time was when the Chinese, for this reason, regarded all other nations as "barbarians." It is to be suspected that that time is, indeed, not altogether past.

Neverthéless. China is changing. She has definitely and whole-heartedly thrown in her lot with the West, and, surveying her vast heritage, seeks to bring it all intact within the ambit of the new order. Nowhere, perhaps, does she desire this more than in Shantung. Development, exploitation, meticulous organization is not, in China's eyes, the first and only desideratum, and so, no matter how much it may be insisted to her that the boring and tunneling of the mountains and hills of her holy land by Japanese prospectors will develop the country's resources beyond the dreams even of a Mandarin's cupidity, it leaves her immoved. She wants to go forward, but she wants to go forward in her own way, at her own time.

This is specially the case with the people of Shantung. For the Shantungese, particularly those on the coast, whilst sharing the patience and cheerfulness of the rest of their fellow countrymen, add to these qualities a curious, dogged attachment to things they hold most dear. an attachment which must render the recent decision at Paris strangely bitter. "Hard-headed." somewhat incredulous, not easily provoked, but, again, not too easily appeased, a shrewd business man, a born farmer or a born fisherman, the Shantungese is ready to learn, but not at the price of the virtual loss of his country. For nearly ten years past, China has been seeking manfully to gain for herself a renewed sense of nationality. She has passedthrough deep waters, suffered no little contumely at the hands of the West, and bravely withstood much threatening nearer home, stoutly flying her republican flag, in which all her dominions find a place. She built high and confidently on the Peace Conference, and now the Peace Conference has failed her. The piece of silk has become a scrap of paper.

Notes and Comments

THERE is scarcely any doubt that the majority of people in the United States are in favor of the daylight-saving law now in effect but threatened with repeal by Congress. In a way, the fight to have the statute repealed is a challenge to the majority of voters and to democracy in government. If the majority want the present benefits retained to be enjoyed next summer, they have only to express their desire to Congress, just as the opponents of daylight-saving are doing. One of the responsibilities that go with the democratic form of government is that every one shall do his part so that laws may be representative of the majority and not of a minority. It is a simple case of exercising your constitutional rights or suffering the penalty.

The pigeons of London are one of the sights to which the attention of visitors is always drawn. St. Paul's Churchyard is a great place of gathering, and here the birds flock down for the more lavish midday meal spread for their benefit, now that rations are less vigorously controlled. They feed out of the hands of their benefactors, perch on their shoulders, and flap and glitter in the sunshine as they fly up and down! Pigeons seem to belong to certain places. Admiralty Arch is another favorite resort, but all over the city the birds have small colonies, and crowds of faithful friends. In Venice and in Florence the pigeons are as much a part of the picture as the greatest buildings, a finishing touch, as it were, with which nobody can dispense.

"A FIGHT against German propaganda in a German community is the phrase in which a newspaper man epitomizes the activity of The Milwaukee Journal that won for that newspaper the Pulitzer gold medal this year from the Columbia University School of Journalism. In the words of the advisory board of the school, the medal was awarded for the Journal's "strong and courageous campaign for Americanism in a constituency where foreign elements made such a policy hazardous from a business point of view." These surely are good reasons for awarding a medal, and the prize has all the more significance from the fact that the board has had sufficient restraint to withhold it in a year when no newspaper seemed to have fairly won it on the basis of "disinterested and meritorious public service." That was in 1917. In 1918 it was awarded to The New York Times "for printing in full valuable documents affecting the issues of the war."

ONE of the problems of modern city planning is to get sunshine. For example, to quote a Canadian cityplanner propounding what almost sounds like a conundrum: "How shall a detached building be constructed and oriented so that not only the exterior wall surfaces, but also the surface of the ground around them shall have the direct rays of the sun for as long a time as possible on December 21?" The problem, it appears, can be worked out, and has been, in the case of at least one town, in which each house, and even each building in the business section, is a solution of this technical problem. It appears also that the way not to do it is to follow the longestablished custom of many builders in the north temperate zone and square the walls of the building with the points of the compass. The town that gets all possible sunlight has no north and south or east and west streets, and the walls of its structures stand at various angles with the weather-vane, if there is one, on the church steeple.

AN OBSERVER who has heard conversation between overseas American soldiers returning to an important city deduces that one result of the war will be cleaner streets in American municipalities. Glad to get home. the men from France were disturbed by the untidy condition of the home streets. And they were not only criticizing, but were discussing a plan whereby any soldier who returns and finds his home neighborhood not properly "policed," which in the army means that a place is kept picked up and clear of rubbish, shall form a delegation with nine other soldiers, march to the City Hall, and see that something is done to improve conditions. The same idea is said to have been expressed by many returning soldiers, and one may judge that enough missionaries of neighborhood neatness, educated by the wellpoliced camp streets and parade grounds of army service, will be scattered throughout the Nation to make a difference in many a now careless American community.
